New York City's Shame.

The confession of Alderman Jachne is said to have startled New York. The startling phase of the case must have been that a bribe-taker had told on himself and given the officers of the law a key to the whole situation. The fact that Jacob Sharp and his associates had resorted to wholesale bribery to get their street railway franchise, could not have been a surprise, for the testimony of Sharp and his friends confirmed the darkest suspicions of fraud.

Of course the machinery of the law will be set in full motion to bring the guilty to justice, and if political influence is not too strong on the side of the bribe-takers, somebody will be punished. Perhaps the franchise will be declared forfeited. After that—what? The Tweed exposures shook the great city of New York and startled the country. Speakurs grew eloquont and tons of denucciation came from the press. New York had had a lesson, and she resolved to profit by it.

But the great city of New York is governed by a small part of its voting population. The majority of its people are too busy making money or battling for bread to give much attention to the government which comes nearest to them. Local pride is wanting and therefore there is little public spirit. The vigilant and virtuous few are howled down and counted out by the men who control the elections and fill the public places.

New York has a numerous and able press, and yet it may be doubted whether to there is a city in the country in which the local press has less influence in the local elections and government. The press may thunder, but the men who run the machine do not mind the thunder, and the torpid public conscience is aroused only at long intervals, as by a Tweed exposure, and then for a short time only. The jobbers count safely on a relapse, and the relapse always comes. To judge by the past, it will come again after the Broadway bribery shall have become an old song, and that will not be long.

The Entirond Strike and Its Cost

As soon as Master Workman Powderly was known to have gone West, confidence began to be re-established, for the country has great faith in Mr. Powderly's wisdom has great faith in Mr. Fowderly's wisdom and in his willingness to restore the orderly course of business. Having reached Kansas City Mr. Powderly said: "Candidle, I a short sketch of his literary career, and a short sketch of his literary career, There has not been a better number than this.—Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. or for its continuance. Now that great loss has been inflicted upon labor and capital, arbitration is looked to for a settlement. How much wiser it would have been to turn to arbitration is and will be read with interest, as everything is about this beginning. A St. Louis dispatch to the beginning. A St. Louis dispatch to thing is about this interesting man. the New York Times gives an estimate of number has a full and varied table of conthe cost of the strike after it had been on for eleven days:

The strike has continued now for 11 days on the Missouri Pacific, during which days on the Missouri Pacific, during which time acarcely any freight has been moved by the railroad. If the road had been steadly in operation there would have been moved within this time between various points, according to a fair esti-mate, not less than 60,000 tons, or 122,000,-000 pounds, of freight, the value of which would be over $20,000,000. Of course this freight is not actually lost, because much of it is not perishable, but in its remainof it is not perishable, but in its remain-ing stationary there is just as much lose as would occur in the cutting off of that much trade. There is loss in damage to the property and shrinkage of value which can scarcely be computed. The railroad people estimate that the loss to the com-

"Warhelt und Dichtung; A Study of George Eliot's Love-Life," by A. P. C., is a curious and ingenious inquiry into the unwritten chapters which A. P. C. insists there must have been in the life of George Eliot. On this score the author finds the autobiography, edited by Mr. Cross, unsatisfactory because it is dumb except in the "study" two propositions are laid down. Proposition I. It is impossible that George Eliot grew to the age of twenty-one without having some sort of a love affair—probably, a very desperate one. The argument seeks to show that Edward Clarke, who became the bushand of George Eliot's ister Chrisses, was the first love. Proposition II. That a person of George Eliot's temperament could not have resched middle age without having agrand passion—something more powerful three of the proposition of the convenient point in the State as an early day, and organize.
